St Mary Bourne . . .

. . . takes its name, in part, from the Bourne Rivulet which has also been known as 'the Swift' or, in one village history, 'the Upper Test'. It is a seasonal stream, supposedly rising in February and disappearing in November. However, after some years when it did not flow at all and, more recently, when it has flowed continuously through the whole year, no one sensible now attempts to predict its behaviour. The first part of the name 'St Mary Bourne' may have come from the fact that the rivulet rose near 'Lady Day' in the old calendar.
